Special Points:

1. It is a one handed operation that allows the top to be lifted without releasing the lever's grip so it cannot hit a person in the face as against the other spring loaded versions which must be held by one hand as they are released by the other hand to ensure they do not lift suddenly – dangerous.
2. If the bed is raised while the table is over the bed, the table top will automatically rise with the bed, whereas the fixed table versions may be tipped over and anything on the table will fall – damage and dangerous.
3. Releasing the lever's grip will have no affect on raising or lowering the top until the person doing so either lifts or depresses the top whereas the fixed versions have the tendency to lift, on some models with great force due to the internal spring – dangerous.
4. While the top can be lifted without releasing the lever's grip, the top cannot be depressed without releasing the lever's grip. It is fixed in the downward direction until the lever's grip is released.
